The Equality and Human Rights Commission welcomed the passing of the Equality Bill, which received Royal Assent on 8th April. It contains a series of measures for tackling inequalities which the Commission considers will help Britain to become a fairer society. Some of the specific measures in the bill, which the Commission has supported, include:

- Making the law easier to understand and implement by simplifying 116 pieces of equality legislation into a single Act for individuals, public authorities and private organisations.
- Giving people the right not to be treated less favourably by public authorities because of their age, religion or belief, sexual orientation, or transgender status; as well as their disability, gender, or race which were already covered.
- Extending anti-age discrimination rules to include goods, facilities and services, thereby stopping people being unfairly refused insurance or medical treatments based on what age they are, for example.

You can find more information about the Equality Bill on the Commissions website:
